Not illustrated. 1917 Excerpt: .habitat groups of animals and birds; collections illustrative of the ethnology of the Pacific Northwest, arranged in tribal sequence from the Columbia River north to the Arctic; also collections illustrative of the ethnology of the Philippines and of China; together with commercial, historical and art exhibits. Besides the exhibit series above mentioned, the museum has a herbarium and an ornithological collection which are primarily for reference and study purposes only, and are often consulted by specialists in these particular fields. Members of the U. S. Biological Survey have consulted the collections, also the Provincial Botanist of British Columbia, and members of the Canadian Geological Survey. These collections, although very valuable, are far from being thoroughly representative of the Northwest Coast region. It is hoped that this deficiency may be remedied in the near future, and that a field man may be added to the museum staff,...
